PREFACE.

HERE are two forts of language, by which mankind may communicate their thoughts one to another: The one given us by God himself, the other invented by man: The former, consisting of founds, is instantaneous and transient, by which we express our oughts assume the latter, being composed of characters, is permanent, and is designed to resent them in all times and places.

Although perspicuity is justly allowed to be the greatest elegance in language, yet man's chief ign being to render himself intelligible, it is as essentially requisite, that this force and discount of sound, in a fluency of pronunciation, should be done in such a way as to delight and ter the ear.

As a proof that propriety of speaking is an art of great importance to mankind, we need y reslect, that men, in all ages, have endeavoured to attain it; that it is not only an ornantal, but an useful accomplishment; and that all mankind are concerned in the consequences it, the ignorant as well as the wise, the illiterate as well as the learned.

The English language, by the happy union of its vowels and consonants, (in the former of ich it abounds more than most languages,) constitutes the three great powers of speech, mel, barmony and expression; and is superior to the Greek, Roman and Italian languages, as it ites, at once, their frength, beauty, and grace.

There is no earthly object capable of making such various, and such forcible impressions upon human mind, as a complete speaker. It is be who can at once regale the eye, with the view its most amiable objects, the buman form in all its glory; the ear, with the original of all sic; the understanding, with its proper and natural food, the knowledge of important truth; the imagination, with all that is beautiful, sublime, or wonderful.

From the united endeavours, and studious attention of men of letters, and from that spirit of ulation that ever prevails among them, written language has been cultivated, and is arrived a degree of persection, superiour to that of many other nations, and inseriour to sew.—And ugh England cannot boast of orators, equal, either in point of ability or number, to those the ancient Greeks and Romans, yet elocution is become a more general study: her power, which all mankind are susceptible, and have experienced, in a greater or less degree, has id us into an ardent desire to become masters of it, and has encreased the number of her vocs; as appears from the attention now paid to it by all ranks of people; since every school reputation in this island has introduced the study of it as a principal part of education:—

Greas, but a few years ago, it was greatly neglected, being confined to our universities, the well-trod well-trod stage, or among the learned and polite, who, with other branches of literature, he made it their peculiar study.

Seeing, then, that vocal language is as ardently fought after as literal, I have turned my a tention, these three years past, for investigating a plan to fix a standard for the pronunciation of the English language; or rather, for communicating to every one, the means of knowing homen of letters, and persons eminent for propriety of speaking, deliver themselves upon a occasions.

That there is a difficulty in fixing this flandard in question, is evident from what follow The literati, who make etymology the invariable rule of pronunciation, often pronounce won in such a manner, as to bring upon themselves the charge of affectation and pedantry; an though custom, in a great measure, is the rule of present practice, we should by no means follow the daily alterations introduced by caprice: In particular cases, however, it is necessary the should mutually give way to each other.

Mere men of the world, notwithstanding all their politeness, often retain so much of the provincial dialect, or commit such gross errours in speaking and writing, as to exclude them from the honour of being the standard of accurate pronunciation. Those who unite these two characters, and, with the correctness and precision of true learning, combine the ease and elegant of genteel life, may justly be styled the only true standard for propriety of speech.

It is from the practice of men of letters, eminent orators, and polite speakers in the metropolis, that I have deduced the criterion of the following work, on the merit of which the learned part of mankind are capable of determining for themselves: But, I am happy, that from an impartial criticism of the Reviewers, who are competent judges of my performance, an on whose judgment I willingly rest my own; I am happy, I say, that the Public in general will berely be informed of its real merit, and treat it with that deference or contempt it may be institled to.

The plan I have fixed upon, for my intended purpose, will, I hope, be sound as eligible a it is explicit, and superiour to that adopted some years ago by Mr. Buchanan, who, to essent the same design, expressed the sounds of words by varying their orthography. Another late author, Mr. Spence of Newcastle, has attempted to ascertain this wished-for criterion, by means of a new alphabet. Whether these gentlemen were sufficiently acquainted with the English language, to convey the true pronunciation of it by these or any other methods, is not my province to enquire into, or determine. I cannot, however, forbear remarking, that this strange metamorphose of words, must be exceedingly prejudicial to all, but particularly to youth, who, is being taught how to read and speak by hieroglyphics, and new characters, will never learn how to write correctly; or, if they have been previously acquainted with the orthography of our language, I am sully persuaded, it is the readiest way to learn to forget it.

On my first and last view of Mr. Buchanan's essay, which was about three years ago, resecting on the disadvantages which must accrue to youth, who make use of it, to learn the pronuncia-of the English, I began to consider, that a more rational method was practicable; and that ork of this nature, might not only be calculated to convey to the reader the true pronuncian of words, but that it might also comprise the qualities and requisites effential to other dicnaries. My intention, and plan of the work, being communicated to persons of learning and gment, I was perfuaded to perfevere, 'till at my leifure hours from business, I had brought it the state in which you now find it.

That the standard of our language can never be fixed by a rational division only of the words o fyllables, without certain characters denoting the different founds of the vowels and conants, will infantly appear, by the flightest inspection into the Key to this work, where you I find them arranged in all their variations.—And though the manuscript was complete when . J. Walker's Pronouncing Dictionary was first, published (and would have been printed bee his, if my former residence had not been remote from printers), I had determined, before aw it, to fet aside my own, imagining that Mr. Walker, so celebrated for propriety of speak-, had fallen upon a proper method of communicating it to all those, who might be defirous becoming masters of elocution, at so small an expense as 6s. Being, however, disappointed my expectations, I resolved to put it to the press, as soon as I removed to this place.

I was afterwards in greater doubt about publishing it, as my intentions were likely to be anipated by another formidable competitor, Mr. Sheridan, who, in his Lectures on the art of ding profe, promifes shortly to present the public with a rhetorical grammar and pronouncing flionary.—After a due confideration, and strict scrutiny of the plan be proposed to pursue, and liging it inadequate to the task, I refumed my former intention. —This celebrated author, king a curfory view of the low state to which oratory is reduced, after ranking the whole body clergy as schoolboys, schoolmasters as blockheads, and his cotemporary authors no betteran old women, fays, " Nothing can be a stronger proof of the gross errours into which literary men fell, in their feveral grammars and treatifes upon this fubject, than that the best of them have mistaken diphthongs for simple founds, and simple founds for diphthongs; compound confonants for fingle, and fingle for compound—say, what is still more extraordinary. that they have mistaken vowels for confonants: all which I shall presently make appear. What fuperstructure, built on such fundamental errours, could stand?"

Is it not amazing, that Mr. Sheridan, whose fagacity can discover so many defects in the fitings of his cotemporaries, should, notwithstanding, be so blind to his own; nay, that hould fall into the fame errours and abfurdities which he explodes with fo much warmth in hers ?

That this is really the case, will require but little of that gentleman's skill to demonstrate, or any fupernatural capacity to comprehend; nor shall I, in pointing out his mistakes to the ablic, attempt to refute or deny the validity of his affertions.

"The first necessary step" fays Mr. Sheridan, "towards establishing rules for this art, upon any folid foundation, is, as in all others, to afcertain the number, and explain the nature of ** Its first simple elements; for any errour there, must earry an incorrigible taint throughout.

founds of vowels in our tongue; but on a nearer examination, we shall find, that there are feveral duplicates of the same sound, differently marked. Thus, the second sound of a and a as in hote, there, are the same. The third sounds in e and i, here, field, are also the same

The found of o, in not, is only the short sound of a in hall, which will be immediately per-es crived, if we place the same consonant after the vowel in its long and short sound; as ball, so boll, naught, not. The second sound of i in the word bite, and u in cube, are not simple

" the first perceived in the last fyllable of lovely, is only the short found of e, and he second in try, is the fame as i. So that there remain only nine simple founds or vowels, which I shall presently enumerate."

With the profoundest respect to Mr. Sheridan's superiour abilities, I appeal to him and the Public, from the scheme of the vowels, &c. given in the key to this work, whether he has not omitted several sounds peculiar to certain vowels, and particularly the sound of à, as heard in the words part, dart, &c. By Mr. Sheridan's syllabus, one might suppose, that a had only three sounds, c three, i three, o three, and y two; whereas, if you turn to the key, you

This found of a, frequently occurs in our language: For, besides that it is very often found in words of pollysyllables, there are no less than 145 words of monosyllables, which, if pronounced in any other manner, than as a in art, charm, &c. the speaker would be tray a contemptible singularity of accent.—See my Only sure Guide to the English Tengue.

ill find, that a has fix different founds, e five, i four, a five, u three, w two, and y three. In der to convince you more clearly, that we have fourteen distinct articulate founds in our vowels, hall give you another scheme below, in which the several duplicates of the same found will we the same figure over them.

From the above scheme, it is evident, we have fourteen simple, distinct, articulate sounds in r vowels, besides the compound sounds of the diphthongs; which may be seen by referring to e Grammar, part I. under the article Diphthong.

Mr. Sheridan remarks, that i and u are always diphthongs. To which I answer, when the und of u is protracted, as in true, due, &c. it has evidently the nature of a diphthong. But is is not always the case: For example, the u in the word truth, if properly pronounced, is more than a simple sound. The same observation holds good, with respect to i, which, when a 2

receded by a confonant, and uttered by a good speaker, has not only an unity of found, be the clearest and most piercing of any vowel in the English language.

The same author maintains, that w is always a diphthong, and y a vowel. To prove the sinfle he instances the words, weed, wage, &c. Now, if w were a diphthong in these words, weed wage, when, &c. would contain two syllables, though they are universally allowed to be, an always uttered as monosyllables. Consonants, whose characteristic is to give form to a succeeding wowel, should be pronounced as quick as possible; and if w, at the beginning of words, be properly articulated, it is always a consonant, performing the same office as the others; but if protracted in its sound, it is of a vocal nature. To demonstrate, that w, in the beginning of words, is actually a consonant, let us call it so, according to Mr. Sheridan's plan, and then articulate the words wool, wolf, which will either be so-sol, so-olf, or sol, solf; neither of which modes of pronunciation is just. Mr. Sheridan says, that w has always the sound of so; but this is not true when w is of the vocal kind, partaking of the nature of a diphthong, and preceded by e, is sounds ū, pronounced you, as in new, blew, &c. Lastly, to prove still surther, that w is consonant, I shall instance the word one, which is pronounced by all Englishmen, as if written won. The articulation of w consonant, requires a closer contact of the lips, and a quicker and more forcible emission of breath than so does, in the same proportion as h aspirate, to h mute.

The same author, to evince that y, which he calls ee, is always a vowel, quotes the word yard, yore, &c. If a new name were to be generally adopted for y consonant, (that is, when it begins a word) I am persuaded, the Public would agree with me, in thinking, that it could not have a name that would convey its power more properly than ye, which, when rightly articulated, has a very different sound from ee; and by this mode of articulation, it does the office of a consonant, by giving form to a succeeding vowel. If y be no consonant, then the words ye, yes, &c. would be ee; ee-es, ee-es, ee-es, ee-es, is, it and eest. But who pronounces then in this manner? As a further proof that y consonant is articulated with a different motion of contact of the mouth than ee, let us only attend to the pronunciation of the words billiards, billiards, prazier, soldier, righteous, &c. and we shall find, that the vowels i and e take the sound of the consonant y, they being pronounced as if written billyards, billyous, grazyer, soldyer,

It is now requifite, that I should take notice of a fingularity in the following work, which regards the right use of the acute or grave accents. The celebrated author above mentioned, is among others, a zealous advocate for unity of accent; and indeed, most of our lexicographer have made use of the acute accent only, which they have placed indiscriminately over long and short syllables;—nay, they go so far as to tell us, that the accent always makes the syllable long; than which nothing can be more absurd, as it tends to a total annihilation of the harmony of verse, which consists in the pleasing variety of long and short, accented and unaccented syllables.—Contrary to such an impropriety, I have ventured to make a due distinction, by proper use of the grave or acute accent; the former being affixed to flat and flowly accented ables, and the latter to sharp and quickly accented.

After doing myself justice, by particularizing the superiority this work has over other dicparies, in this important matter, I cannot help doing equal justice to the Public, by frankly festing, that it yet contains a manifest deficiency or imperfection, by my not having adopted herality of accent, without which, it is impossible to articulate distinctly an almost infinite mber of words in our language.—To enter minutely into the propriety of it, would take up re time than I can possibly dedicate to the purpose; but that I may enforce, in some measure, necessity of it, I have made the following observations, which I also offer to the consideration the impartial Public.

agree, that the general use of accept is, to distinguish the most significant syllable by a rue ater stress of the voice: Yet this is not always proper; for we have many words of two sylles compounded of simple words, which, if pronounced otherwise than with an accent equalforcible on both, would be exceedingly improper :- fuch are, byroad, gamecock, batcafe, band-

and If, then, accent performs the same office in syllables, as emphasis does on words; and if the ef end of both be, to convey the most fignificant and important parts of words and senten-, the former of which lies in the radical fyllables, I should be glad to know who can proince the words, cavaleade, difappoint, difapprove, immature, intervene, overflow, &c. with percuity, unless an accent be laid on the first and last syllables? Nay, I ask further, if it is not height of absurdity, to prefer a syllable that is merely formal or expletive, (by giving it a onger accent) to that which constitutes its very effence, its signification?

With respect to words of pollysyllables, requiring a plurality of accent, it sometimes happens, t one fyllable is pronounced stronger than the rest, and which most frequently falls on the we accent; the strength of this fyllable, however, loses its force, and is always determined the number of accents in such words: and except there be a very distinguishing stress of the ce on the radical parts with which such words are compounded, the most consummate speaker other respects, would ill deserve the name of orator, from the impossibility of his being in-

Laftly, Those persons who are so strenuous advocates for unity of accent, I ask, how they uld pronounce the words, historiography, inseparability, naturalization, prognostication, superiority, with a fingle accent? For, 'till I hear thefe, and fuch others, diffinctly articulated, (which clieve is not in the power of man to do), I shall continue in my practice, as well as opinion, a plurality of accent.

It will naturally be asked, why I have not adopted the measures which I so strenuously support? In answer to this, I can only say, That as this work is calculated chiefly for schools, the adting of it might be deemed, by the generality of teachers, rather as an obstacle than an imfions are not eafily to be furmounted: So that the only alteration I durft make for the prefe was, that of introducing the grave and acute accents.

Notwithstanding, the judicious teacher who may coincide in my sentiments concerning a plur ity of accent, may supply their deficiency, by the following general rule, from which there is a one exception.—Reduce all words of pollysyllables to their radicals, and as many roots there are contained in them; so many accents will the word require.—For example—the word require is accented on the fourth syllable; the radical of which is edify, which is accented the sirst; therefore edification has two accents, viz. ed'i-f'i-ca'tion.

There are many words in our language which require three accents, as, irrefifibility, interlination, acceleration, &c.—and though these, and such words, have only one accent assixed to them yet, from the rule just given, they will be found to be intitled to three, viz. Yr're-fist?-bYI'-ty Yn'tér-l'in'e-à'tion, ac'eèl'ér-à'tion, &c.—The only exception from this rule, is, in the formation of derivatives, whose radicals of two syllables have the accent on the last: these are made by changing the radical accent from the last to the first syllable.—Thus, abjuration, admiration, a stransion, whose radicals are, ab-jure', ad-mire', af-sirm', require the accents on the first and third syllables, as, ab'ju-ra'tion, ad'mi-ra'-tion, af'sirm-a'tion.—This change of the accent from their radicals, is made for reasons of euphony, which sometimes interferes with general rules; it being requisite, that in particular cases they should mutually give way to each other. Nothing, however, is more destructive to the harmony of language, than the too frequent practice of bringing the accent in words as forward as possible: In conformity to this rule most of our lexicographers have accented the words acceptable, commendable, &c. on the set of syllable, contrary both to etymology and euphony: these errours I have avoided, by giving them the radical accent, viz. on the second syllable.

It may be necessary to remark further on this subject, that the vowels ā, â, à; ē, ê; ī, i; ō, ō; ū, w, and the diphthongal sounds of ŏû, ŏw, ûā and ûē, require the grave accent; all the others the acute: except, however, the vowels â and ŏ, and the diphthong ŏû, each of which have a long and a short sound:—Therefore, when the sound of â is short, and ŏ long I have affixed the acute accent to the former, and the grave accent to the latter, even in words of monofyllables; as, wâs', wâtch'; morn', fost': without this minute and necessary distinction, persons unacquainted with oral language would be apt to pronounce them the very reverse

Although I have followed our modern authors, in exterminating the letter k from word derived from the French, and have written arithmetic for arithmetick, public for publick, and critic for critick, &c. yet, as this kind of orthography tends to a manifest annihilation of their etymology, it ought to be exploded. This innovation, however, is more tolerable than that of writing favor, bonor, ambassador, &c. for favour, bonour, ambassadour, &c. And as, in literal language, there should ever remain some etymological traces; and as this new, false mode of spelling, does not convey their true orthoepy, and is repugnant to etymology, I have ventured to write them conformable to the language whence they are derived.

OBSERVATIONS respecting the VOWELS.

Of the VOWEL A.

Wherever A, in the beginning or middle of words, is without any character over it, as or a; it has the found of A or a:—For example; in the word A-bol'sh-a-ble, the a in the and fourth syllables is the same as a, which is only the long sound of a contracted.

Of the VOWEL E.

What has just been said of A, is applicable to this vowel: For example; in the word re-ty, the e in the first and third syllables, is the long sound of c contracted, which is the e as e: So that E or e, without any character over it, is always to be sounded E or e.

Of the VOWEL O.

the vowel O, in any position, have no character over it, it is the long found of O contractor the short sound of O, as in not.

Of the VowELS I and U.

The vowels I and U, when found without any character over them, in unity or conjunction, attrary to the above three vowels,) have the long founds of i and u ( $\bar{i} & \bar{u}$ ):—But note, the character is always affixed with the grave accent.

Of the VowEL T.

f the long character  $(\tilde{y})$  be not over this vowel, it is always short, whether  $\tilde{y}$  in the midof words, or y at the end.

Of the VOWEL W.

the diphthongal found of w is expressed, for want of types, by varying the orthography, www is pronounced nu: in other respects it sounds oo, like û in bûsh, as in how.

The above observations are the more necessary, as there is not that uniformity I wished to preserved, for want of ascertaining the proper quantity of types necessary for such an unaking.—This desiciency is supplied by pertinent notes at the soot of the proper pages: For mple; at pages 3d and 4th, you are told, that Ab sounds short as Ab; at page 127, that Ex

Ex founds foot as Ex, &c. If, however, another edition should be wanted, these defects shall fupplied, by an additional number of characteristical types.

The Author, in justice to himself and the Public, cannot forbear mentioning, that best the importance of this work, in conveying the true pronunciation of our language, (the we being divided exactly as pronounced), youth may be taught to read and spell by it in one-thing time than by Entick's, Fisher's, or any other spelling dictionary upon that plan: whise singular advantage be, as a teacher, is ready, and will engage to verify, should any particular person think himself injured by, or even entertain any doubt of, this affertion.

Words differently pronounced by our best speakers, as, knowledge, or knowledge; gold, gold, &c. are particularly taken notice of; and every person may pronounce them as he thin most conformable to etymology, analogy or euphony, without betraying his provinciality, deviating from the prefent mode of pronunciation.

It only now remains, to apologize for the errours that have crept in, notwithstanding the frictest care and attention had been paid to it by the Author and Printer.—The candid Publi will, I dare fay, acquit both of negligence, by reflecting on the difficulty of the work, on fioned by the variety of new characters.

The Author, from considerable orders already received for this Dictionary, presumes, the a second edition will soon be wanted;—he would therefore be obliged to the judicious for a candid remarks upon it, which may affish him in bringing it nearer to perfection; that the Public, by their approbation of the plan, may be presented with every improvement that a render it valuable.—Letters for this purpose, directed to the Author at the academy Edinburg will be kindly received.

A proper diphthong, is one found, partaking of two different qualities, making a distinct

An improper diphthong, is the meeting of two vowels, making but one fyllable, one of which is nly heard.

There are twentyfive dipththongs, viz. ai, ao, au, aw, ay; ea, ec, ei, eo, eu, ey, ew; ie, oe, oi, oo, ou, ow, oy; ua, ue, ui, uo, and uy.

of TRIPHTHONGS.

A triphthong, is the assemblage of three vowels in the same syllable, forming one distinct arculate sound; of which there are nine, viz. eau, eye, ieu, iew, uai, uea, uee, uoi, and uoy.

The single and double vowels are again distinguished by short and long; for which reason, sharp ad quickly accented syllables require the acute, and slat and slowly accented the grave accent.

Of the different Sounds of the DIPHTHONGS and TRIPHTHONGS. Of the DIPHTHONG AI.

The diphthong ai has three different founds: Ist, a (like a in hate), as in hair; 2diy, a (like in hat), as in * plaid; and, 3dly, e (like e in met), as in said, pronounced fed.

of the CONSONANTS.

A confonant is a letter which cannot be founded, or but imperfectly, without the coalition of a wowel; as m, whose found is em, by prefixing the vowel e; and p founds pe, by placing the same vowel after it.

The confonants are divided into mute, aspirate, sibilant, and liquids or half vowels.

The mutes are, b, c, d, g, k, t, and q; the afpirate, b; the fibilant, c, s, z; and the liquid

These are again subdivided, into labial, dental, palatine, and nasal,

Of the different Sounds of the CONSONANTS.

B has one unvaried found, is used before all the vowels, and before the confonants l and r: is the soft sound of p, being pronounced with less force. In the following words it is mute; s debt, debtor, subtle, doubt, lamb, limb, dumb, thumb, climb, comb, womb, &c.

C founds hard like k, before a, o, u, l, and r; but before e, i, y, or an apostrophe, it is ounded foft; as in cement, city, cypher, plac'd, &c.

Cb have three different founds: 1st, like tsb, as in church, crutch. 2dly, Like sh in the French erivatives, chaise, machine. And, 3dly, Like k in words derived from the learned languages; s chord, chymist, archangel.

D, which is the foft found of t, as b is to p, used before all the vowels, and the consonants r nd w, has but one uniform found; as draw, dwell.

F, which is the hard found of v, requiring only a quicker and stronger aspiration, has but one niform found.

bin ue:

G is always founded hard before a, o, u, l, r, and at the end of words, unless it be foftend by d or e. It has a found less sharp, but more guttural, than c, k, or q; and is sometimes and and sometimes foft before e, i, and g.

G before n, is also silent, but lengthens the syllable; as sign, condign, &c. *

Gb at the end of words sometimes sound like f; as in cough, laugh, tough, rough, trough: In nost other words, gh are silent, serving only to lengthen the syllable; as although, through, high, igh, thigh.

Ph are always founded like f, except in phthisic, phthisical, where they are filent.

Th have two founds: hard; as in thin; and foft; as in thine.

H is a note of aspiration, and shews, that the vowel following it, must be sounded with a rong emission of breath; as in hose, borse; sometimes it has no sound at the beginning, midle, and end of words; as, an honest man, an hour, rhetoric, Messiah. It is undoubtedly a contraint, as it gives form to a succeeding vowel.

7 is founded like a foft g.

K has the found of c hard. This letter is never doubled, but has c often before it, to shorten he preceding vowel.

L is doubled at the end of monofyllables; as in kill, fall; but in compound words, one of mothe l's is suppressed; as in skilful. It is mute in some words; as in calf, half, could, would, cing ould, walk, talk, salmon.

M has one invariable found.

N has always the same sound; and after an m at the end of a word it is mute; as damn, bymn, mids indemn, &cc.

P always

* Some orators pronounce g at the end of words; as, loving: and others fay it should be sint; as, speaking.

P always retains the fame found: it is mute in tempt, and its derivatives. See B.

Q is always followed by u. In French derivatives, it founds like k; as in conquer, liquor, lacquer, rifque, chequer.

Re, at the end of words derived from the Greek or French, are pronounced like er; as is theatre, metre, fepulchre.

I has naturally a sharp histing found; as in fifter: when it ends a word, it is founded like :

as fees, bees, &c. except in this, thus, us, yes, where f retains the hiffing found.

S has the found of z before ion, if a vowel go before it; as in confusion: but that of f sharp, if it follows a consonant; as in diversion. Before e mute, it sounds like z; as in devise; and before y at the end of words; as in daisy. But note, That s almost always retain the hissing sound V is the soft sound of f; as in vain.

W is either a vowel or a consonant. See the Preface, page 10.

X has two founds, sharp and flat : sharp, like ks; as in extreme; and flat like gz; as in exile

Z has nearly the found of ds.

of SYLLABLES.

A fyllable consists of one or more vowels, joined to one or more consonants, so as to make a complete sound in one breath; as, a, pen, pen-knife, desk, &c. but, without a vowel, no syllable can be formed; for, pn, dsk, are not syllables of themselves; whereas, by the assistance of the yowel e, they make two distinct words; as, pen, desk.

From this we may observe, that reading is only a quick spelling; and spelling is the art of reading by naming the letters fingly, and dividing words correctly into their fyllables

Syllables, in speaking, are sounds, of which words are composed and formed; and in writing they are parts of the same words, composed of characters, which represent those sounds; as, an mi-bi-late, which has sour parts, sour sounds, and sour syllables.

A general RULE for the DIVISION of SYLLABLES.

1. A confonant between two vowels, must be joined to the former, to make the first syllable; as, bal-ance, ev-i-dent, ac-cip-i-ent.

2. A double consonant must be divided; as in sup-per, din-ner, &c.

3. When two vowels come together, both distinctly sounded, they must be separated in spelling; as, co-e-qual, mu-tu-al.

4. Grammatical terminations, or endings, must be separated in spelling; as, lov-ed, walk-edf.

mov-ing, per-fe-ver-ance.

5. Consonants not proper to begin a word, must be divided; as, log-man, lob-ster, lock-ram.

6. Confonants which may begin a word, are to be divided, whenever their separation converte the found of each syllable of the word the nearest to true orthopy; as, rep-ro-bate, ret-ro-grate, un-der-fec-re-ta-ry.

Of ETYMOLOGY.

tymology explains the derivation of words, in order to arrive at their first and primary signifiin; and teaches the various modifications by which the sense of the same word is diversified: I write, I wrote, man, men.

primitive word, is that which comes from no other, either in the same, or any other lan-derivative word, is that which comes from some other word in the same language, or from ther language.

fimple word, is that which is not mixed or compounded.

compound word, is that which is made up of two or more words.

here are five forts of derivations among words purely English.

. Adjectives from fubstantives: as, night, nightly; weight, weighty.

. Substantives from adjectives : as, nice, nicenes; delicate, delicatenes; muddy, mud, &c.

. Adverbs from adjectives: as, mortal, mortally; finful, finfully, &c. . Verbs from adjectives: as, ftraight, ftraighten; foft, foften, &c.

Participles from verbs: as, place, placing, placed.

of WORDS.

WORDS, divided into classes, are called parts of speech; of which there are nine different ds, viz. article, noun, adjective, pronoun, verb, adverb, conjunction, preposition, interjection. The article is a word prefixed to substantives, when they are common names of things, to nt out the extent of their fignification.

. A noun, or substantive, is the name of any person, place, or thing.

3. An adjetlive is a word which expresses some quality, or other accident belonging to the

4. A pronoun is put instead of a noun, to point out some person or thing.

5. A verb

This rule is liable to exception: For example; if morality, (from moral) be divided mo-ralinflead of mor-al-i-ty, it agrees best with the standard pronunciation: So that in the foling Dictionary, I have sometimes deviated from this general good rule, for the above reason.

7. A conjunction joins words and fentences together.

8. A preposition, which is put before nouns and pronouns, expresses the relation or connect between different words.

9. An interjettion is used to express some sudden emotion of the mind.

of the ARTICLE.

The article is a word prefixed to substantives, to extend or limit their signification.

There are two articles, a and the; a becomes an before a vowel; and before a filent h proing a vowel.

A, the indefinite article, used before substantives of the singular number only, leaves fense of the word to which it is prefixed in a large, that is, undetermined sense; as, a bouse, any house, or one house.

The, † the definite article, used both in the singular and plural number, points out and de mines the sense of the word before which it is placed, to some particular; as, The rule I prove is invariable, i. e. that particular rule.

A fubstantive without an article to limit it, is taken in its widest sense; as, man is mont i. e. all mankind.

Of the NOUN or SUBSTANTIVE.

A noun, or substantive, is the name of any person, place, or thing; as, Thomas, Edinburgh, table, education.

There are two forts of fubstantives, t common and proper names.

Common, or appellative names, are fuch as express a whole kind; as, man, animal, bird, Proper names, are those which express a particular person, place, or thing, &c. so as to a tinguish them from all others of that kind; as, William, Edinburgh.

* The indefinite article a, is joined to the adjectives, few, many; the latter, with great by it; and also to the words, dozen, score, grass, &c.; as, a few men; a great many men; In seen many a tall man; a score of sheep, &c. &c.

† The definite article the, is sometimes applied to adverbs, and to adjectives of the comparate and superlative degrees, to render them the more nervous and precise; as, the more difficult thing is, the more honourable; this is he least of all.

All nouns to which one cannot add the word thing, with propriety, are substantives; a those to which thing may be added, are adjectives.

Of NUMBER,

Number is the distinction of one from many.

noun has two numbers the fingular and the plural.

the fingular number expresses one person or thing; as, a boy, a book, a bouse; or a number of n considered as united together; as, an army.

he plural expresses more than one, and is generally formed from the singular, by adding s, when the pronunciation requires it, es; as, boys, books, houses, armies.

louns ending in ch, fb, fs, x, form the plural, by adding es; as, church, churches; blufb, blufbes;

tiffes; box, boxes.

Of GENDER.

nder is a division of nouns, or names, to distinguish the two fexes.
here are three genders, the masculine, feminine, and neuter.

ords which relate to males, are of the masculine gender; as, man, boy, bull, prince.

ofe which fignify females, are feminine; as, woman, girl, cow, princefs.

Those

Except boof, roof, grief, dwarf, chief, handkerchief, relief, scarf, wharf, reproof, strife, scoff, and others ending in ff, which are made plural by the addition of s.

Those which express things without life, are neuter, that is, of neither masculine nor semin gender; as, pen, ink, paper, desk.

Of CASES.

Cafes imply the different inflexions or terminations of nouns, ferving to express the difference inflexions they bear to each other, and to the things they represent.

English substantives have properly but two eases; but I shall suppose three, the nominal possessive, and objective.

The nominative, which is put before verbs, expresses simply the name of a person, plac, thing; as, man, Edinburgh, desk.

The possessive denotes property, or belonging to; as, man's glory.

The objective follows verbs, shewing, that the action of the person, or nominative placed fore the verb, passes to, or falls upon the noun or word after the verb as its object; as, Il Thomas.

Adjectives are never varied on account of gender, number, or case; the only variation admit of, is that of degrees of comparison.

of the COMPARISON of ADJECTIVES.

Comparison, in a general sense, is the consideration of the relation between two person things, when opposed or set against each other, by which we judge of their agreement or ference, and find out wherein the one has the advantage of the other: But by gramma comparison, we mean the comparing of two or more qualities, whereby we are able to at that the one is more or less, or possessed of any quality in the highest degree; so, of three things, we, by comparing them together, find three degrees of softness, the second being at than the first, and the third the softest of the three. Hence we have

THREE DEGREES of COMPARISON; the POSITIVE, the COMPA

The positive expresses the quality of a thing simply, without comparing it with any of that kind; as, this paper is white

The comparative enlarges or decreases the quality of the thing, a degree from the post as, that paper is whiter than this.

The superlative heightens the sense of the positive in the highest, or diminishes it to lowest degree possible: as, this paper is the whitest of all; that defk is the least.

The comparative is formed from the politive, when the word has but one fyllable, by all er, if it end with a confonant, and r only, if it end in e: as, long, longer; wife, a Sometimes, though rarely, it is distinguished by prefixing the adverb more, before the politics, wife, more wife; long, more long.

The superlative is formed of the positive, by adding st, or est; as, wifest, longest. It is diftinguished by prefixing most, very, or exceeding.

Words of two fyllables, having the accent upon the last, and a few others, admit of a eft, in forming their comparisons; as, polite, politer, polites; noble, nobles, noblest, &c.

Words of more than two fyllables, and those of two, which end in l, form their comptive and superlative degrees, by placing more and most before the positive; as, excellent, most cellent, most excellent; frugal, more frugal, most frugal, &c.

Some few words form their superlative, by adding the adverb most to the end of them; foremost, netbermost, uttermost or utmost, undermost, uppermost.

The following form their degrees irregularly:

Poff. Poff. Comp. Sub. Comb. Sup. little less least better good bad, evil, ill worfe worlt much, or many most more

Note, Double comparatives and superlatives are improper, and must not be used; such are, more braver, most worst, worser, lesser, &c.

Of the PRONOUN.

A pronoun is a part of speech, which is put instead of a noun, to prevent the repetition ereof.

Pronouns have persons, numbers, genders, and cases.

There are fix kinds of pronouns, viz.

cm;

Personal, Relative, Demonstrative, Interrogative, Indefinite, and Adjective.

There are five personal pronouns; I, thou, he, she, it +.

When a person speaks of himself, he uses the word I, which is the first person.

If he speak to another, he uses the word thou *, which is the second person.

When an absent person or thing is spoken of, we make use of be, she, or it, which are all of third person.

But as the speakers, the persons spoken to, and the others spoken of, may be many, so each there pronouns has the plural number, we, ye, they.

There are four pronouns relative, who, which, what, that.

The use of relative pronouns, is to connect sentences together; and they always relate to me preceding substantive, called the antecedent. Blessed is the man who walketh uprightly.

Who is used in speaking of persons, and is either masculine or seminine: which, when we eak of things, and is therefore neuter.

What is likewife applied to things only, and includes both the relative and the antecedent z his is what I wanted; that is, the thing which I wanted.

That is applied, by many writers, equally to persons and things, and has no variation: the an that he beat. The book that I loft.

There are two demonstrative pronouns; this, that. †

This,

the personal pronouns, I. thou, he, she, it, are by some grammarians called substantive, by hers demonstrative pronouns.

This, is made use of in speaking of a thing which is near us. This book is mine: its plur is these. These pens are mine.

That, refers to a thing at a distance from us. That is your book : its plural is those. The pens are yours.

There are three interrogative pronouns; who, which, what. Their name imports their use; which is to ask a question.

Indefinite pronouns express nothing distinct or determined : such are the eight following, form ans, whoever, one, " other, " who, + which, + what. +

Thy, † my, † bis, ber, its, our, your, their, are pronominal adjectives, expressing possession, being always followed by a noun substantive.

Own and felf, in the plural felves, are joined to the above pronominal adjectives, to man their meaning more strongly; as, I did it my own felf. §

The English language, with singular beauty and propriety, admits, in an elevated or poetice style, any inanimate thing to assume person and sex; which personification is therefore marked by the masculine or seminine pronouns, he or she, his or her.

" Soon as the light of dawning science spread

" Her orient ray, and wak'd the muses' song," &c.

THOMSON'S SEASONS

" Low walks the fun, and broadens by degrees,

" Just o'er the verge of day. The shifting clouds

Personal pronouns have three cases, a nominative, possessive, and objective. The nominative placed before the verb; as, I write. The possessive signifies possession, or belonging to; a whose book is this? Tis mine. The objective case follows verbs, and prepositions; as, I is him; I ran before him.

The possessive of one, is one's; of other, other's. The nominative plural of which, is others, and possessive, others'.

the reader may easily distinguish the above from relative pronouns, as there will be me antecedent in the sentence, to which these can refer: nor are they indefinite pronouns, if a question be asked.

My and thy, become mine and thine, when the noun following begins with a vowel or and mute; as, mine hour, thine bonour, mine ears, &c.

Sourfelf, not ourselves, is peculiar to the regal style; as, "Why, 'tis a loving and a fair reply:

Be as ourself in Denmark."

There are four kinds of verbs; substantive, active, passive, and neuter.

A verb substantive, expresses the being or existence of a thing; as, I am, thou art.

A verb active or transitive, expresses an action, which necessarily implies an agent, and an bjeft afted upon; as, I love Edward. In this sentence, the pronoun I, is the agent, love the orb, and Edward the object acted upon. When the verb is active, the agent takes the lead in he fentence. loved; prefeat, prefeating, prefeated. Perticiples excing

A verb passive, expresses a passion or suffering, or the receiving of an action, and implies a agent and an object, like the verb active; but with this difference, that the object of a verb passive takes the lead, and is followed by the agent; as, Thomas is loved by me. Here the pronou me, is the agent, and Thomas the object.

A verb neuter, is that which signifies an action that has no particular object whereon to fall, but which of itself takes up the whole idea of the action; as, I sleep, be snores, you run, the stand, I am come, you are fallen.

Verbs have tenses or times, numbers, persons, modes, and participles.

There are three principal distinctions of time, the present, past, and suture, called indefinite or undetermined time. But, to express an action with some particular limitation and distinction, six other times are used, by the affistance of the auxiliaries, am, be, can, let, do, may, must, ough, could, would, should, might, did, shall, and will.

Of NUMBER.

There are two numbers, the fingular and the plural,

of PERSON.

There are three persons in each mode.

Of MODE.

There are four modes; the indicative, imperative, conjunctive, and infinitive.

The indicative mode affirms, or elfe alks a question; as, I teach. Do you know bim?

The imperative bids or commands; as, Do that immediately. Come bither.

The conjunctive or subjunctive, is expressed under a doubt, condition, &c. with a conjunction prefixed; as, I could do it, if he were willing.

The infinitive expresses the action, without respect to number or person; as, To speak and write well, is commendable.

Of the PARTICIPLE.

There are two participles, the present + and past; the former is called the astive, the latter the passive participle.

VARIATIONS

* English verbs of themselves have only two times; the present and past: the future is made by the auxiliary verb shall or will, and the verb itself; as, I shall write.

† The present participle is formed of the verb, by adding ng or ing; and the past, by d or ed; as, love, loving, loved; present, presenting, presented. Participles having no relation to time, become adjectives.

Of irregular VERBS.

gular, or anomalous verbs, are such as have something singular in the terminations or tions of their tenses. Thus, verbs which do not form their past time active, and persect ple, by the addition of ed to the verb, or d only, if the verb end in e, are called irregular; often contract even our regular verbs; as, moved, placed, which are pronounced mov'd, and movedest, placedest, &c. become movedst, placedst.

is ending in ch, ck, p, x, ll, s, change ed into t, in the past time active, and perfect par-; and also drop one of the double letters; as, fnapt, mixt, dwelt, past, for snapped, mixed, d, passed. Likewise, those which end in l, m, n, p, after a diphthong, shorten the diphor change it into a single short vowel; as, deal, dealt; dream, dreamt; mean, meant; set; sleep, sleep, sec. Ve are changed into f; as, leave, left, &c.

An adverb + is a word joined to a verb, adjective, or another adverb, and applied folely the use of qualifying and restraining the latitude of their signification.

The principal adverbs are those of time, place, order, quantity, quality, manner, affirmation, doubting, comparison, demonstration, and interrogation. They admit of no variation English, except some sew, which have the degrees of comparison; as, soon, sooner, soon often, oftener, oftenest; well, better, best.

of the PREPOSITION.

Prepositions t, so called, because they are commonly put before the words to which they are plied, express the relation or connection between them.

There are two forts of prepolitions, separable and inseparable.

The separable are, above, about, after, against, among, amongst, at, before, behind, beneat below, between, betwist, beyond, beside, by, concerning, for, from, in, into, out of, of, on, on till, to, thr ugb, until, unto, upon, under, with, within, without.

The inseparable, or prepositions in compound, are, a, ab, abs, ad, ana, ante, anti, amp be, circum, co, con, contra, counter, de, dis, e, ex, en, enter, extra, in, inter, intro, mis, mu over, out, for, fore, op, per, post, pre, pro, preter, peri, re, retro, se, sub, subter, super, strans, un, up, and with.

The prepolitions often change their last consonant, into the consonant with which the wa begins; as, commaterial, for conmaterial, &c.

† Most of the adverbs may be distinguished from adjectives, by this rule: If you put a substantive after them, they will make nonsense; whereas, being joined to an adjective, or a verb, they we make good sense. #### of PROSODY.

Property comprises orthopy, or the right pronouncing of words, according to their long of their fyllables; and orthometry, or the art of making verte.

of DUE PRONUNCIATION.

Due pronunciation consists in giving every letter its proper found, and every syllable its proper secent.

ACCENT is the due pronunciation of a fyllable in a word, according to its quantity, whether it be long or short, by a greater stress of the voice, without lengthening or shortening the syllable

QUANTITY is the time in which it is pronounced; and the proportion between a long and thort syllable, is as two to one; hence accent and quantity must be two distinct things.

Of VOWELS conflitting LONG and SHORT Syllables, and of Proper ACCENT.

The long and short founds of the vowels and diphthongs, are particularly mentioned at page xiith of the Preface, and further illustrated in the Key, and at pages xvii, xviii, xix, and xx. of the Grammar: and as the rules which are generally given for the right placing of the accept of words, are liable to many exceptions, I shall omit inserting them, as the best instructor is a good dictionary, having the words accurately accented,

of VERSIFICATION.

Verification is the arrangement of a certain number of fyllables, according to certain laws, abblified in a language by frequent repetition, the harmony of which confifts in a pleafing vaty of long and foort, accented and unaccented fyllables.

English poetry has four kinds of metrical modulations; viz. Iambic, which consists of a short da long syllable; as, re-veal, ob-tain, &c. Trochaic, of a long and a short; as, joy-ful, nd-ly, &c. Dastyle, of one long, and two short syllables; as, pros-per-ous, au-dy-ble, &c. d, Anapæstic, which consists of two short, and one long; as, with his gold, and his trade, &c. lambic measure comprises verses of sour, six, eight, and ten syllables; and Trochaic, of three, e, and feven.

There is another kind of verse, called Alexandrine, containing twelve syllables, which is ed to diversify beroic poetry.

he above specimens will be sufficient to direct the learner in the composition of English verse.

ay, however, be requisite to observe, that what we call accent, does by no means correst with what the ancients called quantity, though it is arbitrarily implied to signify the same o prove this, I shall scan the sambic verse of ten syllables, before recited, according to the of versification, and it will stand as follows.

" The pro phet spoke, | when with | a gloo | my frown,

"The mo narch start |ed from | his shin | ing throne;

" Black cho | ler fill'd | his breaft, | that boil'd | with ire,

" And from | his eye balls flash'd | the liv | ing fire."

low, by the method of scanning this verse, the 2d and 6th syllables both in the first and ad lines, the 2d, 4th and 6th in the third, and the 2d, 6th and 8th in the last line, though rally short syllables, are admitted to supply the place of long ones. The truth is, the antiaws of prosody are by no means conformable to the genius of our language; they are betalapted to the pronunciation of a North Britain, than to an Englishman; as will instantly ar, by reciting it in quantity as it is scanned.

here are few verses in which the laws of prosody do not clash with the language, in point ratorial accent; the following, though not quite correct, may be called an exception.

" As | mufing i | rang'd in the | meads all a | lone, " A | beautiful | creature was | making her moan;

" The | tears they were | falling full | fast from her | eves,

" She | pierced the | air and my | heart with her | cries."

In Sheridan fays, "That when the art of reading with propriety shall have been established, and produced its effects, a new field will be open to our writers, both in poetry and prose, hich will display in a new light the vast compass of our language, in point of harmony and spression, from the same causes which produced similar effects at Rome, in the writers of the Secronian or Augustan age."

That our language is capable of great improvement with respect to prosody, is apparent Ru for, by inspection into our English verse, we shall find, that syllables which are naturally in the and emphatical, are frequently made foort; and those which are foort substituted for long fill ree lables.

By this indifcriminate use of accent and long quantity, allowing strength to supply the plantage of length, the harmony of verse is marred, which, however, is by no means inconsistent with the rules of oratory. If our lexicographers and poets were univerfally to adopt a plurality accent, and make the proper diffinction between long and fhort fyllables, as the Greeks did, b the right application of the grave or acute accent, it would tend to free our verse from the glaring abfurdity.

This, I prefume, must be the new light Mr. Sheridan hints at, with respect to harmony verfe, which I am confident might be fo much improved, that the judicious, in their mufe compositions, might affimilate to the perfection of rhetorical declamation.

PART IV.

of SYNTAX.

CYNTAX is the due construction or connection of the words of a language, into fentence or phrases.

A fentence is a period or fet of words, comprehending some perfect sense or sentiment of mind; and may be either simple or compound.

A simple sentence consists, at least, of a noun and a verb; as, I write.

A compound fentence, is when two or more fentences are joined together; as, The provident of God is over all bis works; be ruleth and directeth with infinite wisdom.

There are two kinds of fyntax; the one of concord, wherein the words are to agree in gender number, person, and case: the other of regimen or government, wherein one word govern another, and occasions some variation therein.

The following general rules, with the notes under each, comprehend whatever is necessary for the true writing or speaking of the English language.

RULE I. A verb * must agree with its agent or nominative, + in number and person; as, I is fruct, they learn, he plays, thou art diligent.

A verb may be put either in the fingular or plural number, to a moun of multitude; the public is, or are, difpleafed.

Every verb, except in the infinitive mode, has a nominative expressed or understood; 14 freak now or never, that is, freak re, &c.

To find the nominative to a verb, ask the question, Who is? Who does? Who suffer RULE VI. The present † participle governs the same case after it, as the verb from which it is wed; as, love your enemies; for in loving them, you fulfil the law.

very nominative case, except the case absolute, and when an address is made to a person, ongs to some verb, either expressed or understood; as, To whom thus Eve, yet sinless; that is, then thus Eve said, &c.

Every adjective relates to some substantive, either expressed or implied; as, the great, the the chosen; that is, persons.

Each, every, either, agree with the nouns and verbs of the fingular number only.

The relative is often omitted; as, the book [which] I read.

Verbs ending with a fingle confonant, preceded by a fingle vowel, and those of two or more bles, having the accent upon the last syllable, double the final confonant of the verb in the m participle, and in every other part of the verb, in which a syllable is added; as, some ing, souttetb; beset, besetting, besettetb.

A COMPREHENSIVE GRAMMAR

RULE VII. When two substantives * come together, which belong to one another, the thing which the other belongs, is placed first, in the possession case; as, the king's troops: or else left by a circumsocution, with the preposition of before it; as, the troops of the king.

RULE VIII. The present † participle, having the definite article the before it, becomes a sin flantive, and governs the preposition of after it; as, the loving of your enemies is the community of God.

RULE IX. When one verb immediately follows or depends upon another, the latter is put it infinitive mode, with the preposition to before it; as, good boys love to learn: except the follow werbs, which have others after them, without the sign to: bid, dare, feel, hear, let, make, need, and sometimes have, not used as an auxiliary; as, I hade him come; he dares not do it; I see run; we heard him come; you let him fall; they will have him come; I made him hear me they need not go; I saw him enter.

RULE X. Prepositions ; always govern the objective case after them; as, he did it for William, i. e. for him; take it from her, and give it to him.

RULE XI. Two S or more nouns of the singular number joined together by a conjunction contive, require verbs, nouns, and pronouns of the plural number; as, greatness and goodness are selected companions.

A substantive put before another substantive, becomes an adjective; as, lime-water, sure Two substantives joined together, signifying the same thing, are put in the same case, in apparation to each other; as, King George.

Every possessive case supposes some nominative to which it belongs; as, St. Paul's; that St. Paul's church.

† Participles having no relation to time, become really adjectives, and admit of the dep of comparison; as, a learned man, a more loving father, the most loving boy.

The prepolitions to and for, are often understood, chiefly before the pronoun; as, give that is, to me: procure me a pen; that is, for me.

Also in or on before nouns expressing time; as, this morning; that is, on this morning: week; that is, in the last week.

The preposition is often inelegantly separated from the relative; as, whom will you give it that is, to whom will you give it?

Every relative has an antecedent to which it refers, either expressed or understood; as, who me, loves my dog; that is, the man who, &c. But, note, It is often omitted; as, the reason upon; that is, which I rely upon.

The conjunction that, is often omitted and understood: See [that] thou tell no man. When presses the end or motive, it governs the verb in the conjunctive mode. In comparing the ties of things, the latter noun following than, or as, is not governed by either of the conions, but agrees with, or is governed by, the verb, or the preposition expressed or underses, he is wifer than you [are]; I am as tall as he [is].

Together with an Essay on ENGLISH GRAMMAR:—adapted to the use of Gentlemen, Merchants, Traders, and Schools,—By W. PERRY, Master of the Academy Edinburgh.

Edinburgh: Printed for the Author, and fold by J. Bell, and W. Creech, Edinburgh; A. Graham Alnwick; C. Etherington, York; J. Ware and Son, Whitehaven; W. Charnley, Newcastle J. Murray and J. Wilkie, London; by most other booksellers in England,—and by the Author

THE variety of subjects which Mr. Perry has here brought into the compass of a single volume, has of necessity obliged him to treat some of them with brevity: in studying con ciseness, however, he appears to have made proper choice of the materials contained in this comprehensive and judicious compilation. That he has omitted nothing useful, we will not pre tend to fay; but that he has retained every thing that is most useful to young persons design have not been bred accomptants, for becoming Men of Business."

LONDON REVIEW for March 1775.

The Edinburgh Magazine and Review for September, the Critical Review for November 1774, and the Monthly Review for January 1775, recommend the above work also in a particular manner; extracts of which have heretofore been given, in most of the News-papers of England and Scotland.
